world's top income earners. In the early 1990s, the world's top income earners were expected to be in the United States, Japan, and Germany.

We had forecast that by several years, we had the best in the world in everything else. In our scenario, developed and transition economies would be the most successful in the world.

When we were considering something else, the first step in our scenario was to look at the world's top income earners. In the early 1990s, the world's top income earners were expected to be in the United States, Japan, and Germany.
